Machines were made to be man's servants. Yet he has grown so dependent on them that they are in a fair way to become his masters. And machines are very stern masters. They must be fed with coal, and given petrol to drink and oil to wash with; and they must be kept at the right temperature. If they do not get their meals when they expect them, they grow sulky and refuse to work, or burst with rage and blow up and spread ruin and destruction all round them. So we have to wait upon them very attentively and do all that we can to keep them in good temper. Already we find it difficult either to work or play without machines, and a time may come when they will rule us altogether, just as we rule the animals. Machines save time and energy for us, but we use them for making more and batter machines. We must remember that machines themselves or the power that machines have given us are not civilization, but aids to civilization.

Real civilization will come only when learn to use these machines as instruments in the service of humanity at large and prevent them from being a means of luxury and power for a few.

Questions:

1. With what purpose were machines invented?
2. How are we required to look after machines?
3. What happens when machines are neglected?
4. In what way are machines useful to us?
5. When do machines become a curse to mankind?
